Mr. A. Warhol
1542 Lexington Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Warhol:

I have followed your career for some time. Your work has evoked a great deal of interest here at Campbell Soup Company for obvious reasons.

At one time I had hoped to be able to acquire one of your Campbell Soup label paintings - but I'm afraid you have gotten much too expensive for me.

I did want to tell you, however, that we admired your work and I have since learned that you like Tomato Soup. I am taking the liberty of having a couple of cases of our Tomato Soup delivered to you at this address.

We wish you continued success and good fortune.

A statement in response to: Hermès International, et al. v. Mason Rothschild.

Dear Community,

So, Hermès filed a trademark lawsuit against me on Friday—although they didn’t send me or my lawyers a copy. My lawyers and I have reviewed Hermès’ complaint. Hermès’ claims are groundless and we look forward to defeating those claims in court and helping to set a precedent.

I am not creating or selling fake Birkin bags. I’ve made art works that depict imaginary, fur-covered Birkin bags.

My lawyers at Lex Lumina PLLC put it well when they said that the First Amendment gives me the right to make and sell art that depicts Birkin bags, just as it gave Andy Warhol the right to make and sell art depicting Campbell’s soup cans.

I have the right also to use the term “MetaBirkins” to describe truthfully what that art depicts, and to comment artistically on those bags and on the Birkin brand.

The fact that I sell the art using NFTs doesn’t change the fact that it’s art. It’s quite clear from reading Hermès’ complaint that they don’t understand what an NFT is, or what NFTs do.

We have tried to be reasonable. Hermès first sent me a letter threatening a lawsuit if I didn’t knuckle under and stop doing MetaBirkins altogether. We wrote to them and explained that we were doing nothing we didn’t have a right to do. We told them that we believed that the dispute could be resolved through an informal conversation between me and an Hermès representative. Hermès chose instead to break off negotiations and sue me.

I hope Hermès understands that I won’t be intimidated.

An open letter to Hermès, OpenSea and Community.

Dear Hermès,

So, I get your cause & cheat letter. While I am sorry if you were insulted by my art, as an artist, I will not apologize for creating it.

Now, as you are aware, the First Amendment gives me every right to create art around my interpretation of the world around me. There are countless examples of artists who reference the world and the products and cultural artifacts in it. With that understanding, MetaBirkins is a playful observation of an existing fashion-culture landscape. I re-interpreted the form, materiality and name of a known cultural touchstone. MetaBirkins are also a commentary on fashion's history of artistic piracy, which is common knowledge for most fashion and alternative circles. My aim is always to create additive art projects that contribute positively to the culture.

When it comes to art, selling my MetaBirkins as NFTs is akin to selling them as physical art prints. It should not be my job to educate you on advancements in the world and the culture of art. Art is art.

There is a growing tide of innovation and evolution, and it is your role as a fashion powerhouse to amplify young creatives and artists rather than sweep them out. Your actions can help determine the future of art in the Metaverse.

You can be a part of an incredible movement.

I'm disappointed to see that MetaBirkins has been removed from your platform without any legal action and notice, and without due process. To have removed us with no warning or consideration is shameful, to say the least.

You used Hermès as an inspiration but for jokes and mockery only. The growth of your business relies on the support of the art community. You should stand by the artists who support you.

It's not too late to step in the right direction.

Hermès and OpenSea

Awesoma concept and exciting project that is definitely pivotal to the future of NFTs. To be able to store value in a digital item and avoid the risks and hassles of a physical item is gonna be revolutionary!
